On the second floor of the Black Tower the group gathered themselves for the final assault. They questioned Kalarus of what it was they were supposed to do. He told them something about finding the Sigil stone at the top of the column of fire which ran through the center of the tower, from bottom to top. When they asked him what to do when they found the sigil stone he was less forthcoming.

The group scouted the ramp to the next floor and found 4 dremora mages and another Mythic Dawn priest waiting and ready for battle. They all had wards up and spells at the ready.

The group poured on the hurt in waves before the mages and priest could really bring anything to bare. They were burned, frozen, bashed and more. Some of effects were illusion but that didn't matter. As the battle raged, Yngvar handed Talan his axe and then placed an arm against one wall of the tower and let out a howl, more bestial than nord and his form rippled and his fingers lengthened into massive claws. Yngvar let out his inner beast and the werewolf/yngvar killed the remaining priest, broke down the door to the top of the tower and proceeded to savage several powerful dremora warriors. Talan, Cocius and Riala joined the fray.

All too soon for the forces of oblivion it was over. Riala used a spell to move the sigil stone out of the column of fire much to the protestations of several in the group. Kalarus arrived and sat down in front of the sigil stone to examine it.

Yngvar reached forward and grabbed the stone. The group and their two horses were instantly transported back to Nirn, where they saw the jill for a brief moment. She told them the minutes had now been mended. [edit – there were two horses in oblivion, one was left on the ground floor of the tower with the massive dragon skull strapped to it's back.

Yngvar, still quite the beast headed out to the forest. Jo'Rak followed and brought him back to camp later in the evening.

Three days later the group arrived at the gates of Skingrad.
